Terms of Service - The Bubbler makerspace program for court-involved teens

The Bubbler makerspace program for court-involved teens is a mobile Madison Public Library program that fosters self-expression, skill development, and community engagement. You’ll learn skills like how to digitize and alter images, audio, and text, and can work on projects involving graphic and 3D art, photography, spoken word, storytelling, and video that document you, your communities, and the justice system.

Your work online
Selected projects will be posted to the Bubbler website (at www.madisonbubbler.org) along with information about local media art programs, youth media initiatives, and juvenile justice resources. Posting projects on the Bubbler website is the best way for us to give you access to your work, and it allows us to share your creative work and insights about your community and the justice system with others.

Although the Bubbler posts your work online, it still belongs to you. You own the copyright to anything you create in the Bubbler. If you ever want your work to be removed from the Bubbler website, we will take it down. Let us know that you want your work removed using the contact information listed on the Bubbler website: madisonbubbler@gmail.com.

If you can't find your work online at the Bubbler website, contact us using the information there (madisonbubbler@gmail.com), and we will, in most cases, be able to get a copy to you. We are able to save and store most work for two years.

Confidentiality
Your privacy is important to us. We will never post any work online that could be used to identify you. Your work will be posted anonymously, without your name or initials.
